

You Are Unique!

Find Out Why...Tell Them Why

Perhaps you've always wondered exactly how to set yourself apart from all the rest of your competition. There is a way that will only take a few moments of your time and will give your company employees something they can say when people ask them how they are different from the rest. We're going to create some "bragging rights."

Right here. Right now.

With all the advertising in the marketplace, it's little wonder that you can get lost in all the "noise" that is in digital, print, mail, broadcast, and outdoor advertising. You have to do and say something that is different and unique—that will set your company apart from all the rest.

How would you like to create a value statement about your company that the customers can relate to? Make it in their terms and what they want to hear. You can!

By creating a Value Proposition statement, you can put your "stake in the sand" where no other competing company will be able to use your same distinct statement.

are you READY?

Take the leap...turn the page.

VALUE PROPOSITION

A Value Proposition is an assertion of what customers think you are. You create this Value Proposition using information you gather from customer answers to your questions — it's that simple!

This statement is a positive declaration about your company. It is composed of not more than three (3) sentences. It is only stated in customer benefit terms. Here is the step-by-step way to accomplish writing your own Value Proposition.

The List: Randomly select 15-20 Residential or Commercial customers with their phone numbers from your company records.

Make the Calls: Using the attached Value Proposition Questionnaire, call your customers and write down their answers on the attached questionnaire sheet.

Look at the Words: Take all the completed questionnaires and write down all the positive words that are mentioned more than once and how many times those words occur. Your customers will have those words pop up over and over again. They'll tell you if you are cheerful, honest, service-oriented, for example.

Create the Value Proposition Statement: Using those words, create a short Value Proposition that say what the customers think of your company.

There you have it — a great statement that will clarify exactly what you are and what you stand for, and a rallying point for your employees and customers.

VALUE

PROPOSITION QUESTIONNAIRE

When you call your small group of customers, please introduce your company and yourself.

Ask: "Would you help me with some feedback about our services for a couple of minutes?"
If you get a "yes", then proceed. Write the exclusive words that the customer uses.

1. Please tell me why did you choose our company?
2. What specific people interactions do you like about us?
3. What is important to you about services you receive from any company?
4. What things don't you like about our competition?
5. What suggestions do you have to help us serve you better?
